Palliative Care

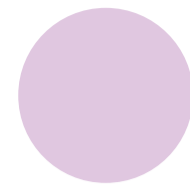

It is possible to manage many of today's conditions with medication. The aim isn't to cure the condition, but to make living with it possible. A pet may live for many years with a chronic illness provided that medication manages the symptoms effectively.

Hospice Care

Hospice care is an option if a pet is suffering from a terminal illness. Hospice care requires an active commitment and constant supervision from the pet's owner. The owner will work with a vet to ensure their pet isn't suffering and maintains a reasonable quality of life.

Pet palliative and hospice care is provided in the owner's home. It can be challenging to commit to the level of care needed to ensure that the pet isn't suffering.

Whilst hospice care is increasing in popularity, it can be difficult to ensure the pet doesn't suffer as his/her health deteriorates.
